

Rudolf Müller

The Wine Cellars Zimmermann-Graeff (founded in 1886) and Rudolf Müller (founded in 1919), two of the most traditional and respected wine producers in the Mosel valley, have merged together in 1998 to form the company ZGM, Zimmermann-Graeff and Müller.

The two product ranges have been harmonised to represent the new company which is now one of the most important in Germany. A harmonised corporate philosophy will see the new venture continue with the principles of Quality, Continuity, Solidity and Innovation, already well established.

The Wine Cellar Rudolf Müller is one of the most traditional and respected wine producers in the Mosel valley. The corporate philosophy is founded on the principles of Quality, Continuity, Solidity and Innovation. The owning families continue to be firmly involved in the running of the business.

Quality control starts with the careful vineyard management, selection of the grapes, musts and wines, which are then subjected to stringent chemical analysis and then must pass severe sensory tests before being purchased — something that is very rare in the German wine industry.

Diligent craftsmanship and the long years of experience are part of our tradition. Modern wine cellar technology and innovative production methods guarantee continual first class quality of our wines. Rudolf Müller sets the standard for quality during the making of our wines by using the newest technical devices — only using stainless steel, glycol-jacketed fermentation tanks.

During the bottling process the specific gravity of the wines is continually spot-checked to ensure the highest possible quality. An ultramodern computer-controlled bottling plant guarantees the high quality of our wines as well as effective production from start to finish.

Through every step of production from buying to bottling, our wines are systematically checked and analyzed by our own officially licensed laboratory.
