

Garnacha has traditionally been the second most planted grape variety in Rioja. It is locally known as La Maldita (The Accursed), due to the difficulties it poses in making high quality wines and to its yields, so low that there is little profit for the grape grower. That is why many have opted for grubbing it up to replace it with other varieties. The wines of La Maldita aim to recover this Rioja heritage, proving that this is a great land for growing Garnacha. To do this, we choose vineyards planted at higher altitudes in soils where this variety is expressed at its fullest.

Garnacha Blanca 2024

"The very young and reductive white 2024 Garnacha Blanca displays a gray color, a flinty, balsamic and medicinal nose and a light and fresh palate with 13% alcohol. It's straightforward, fruit driven and easy to drink. Only a fraction of the wine spent a couple of months in barrique. Give it a little more time. Drink Date: 2026 - 2029."

Garnacha 2023

"A crunchy example of garnacha, with cranberries, Mediterranean herbs and a touch of orange rind. Medium- to full-bodied with nervy red berry character that follows through to a tight, tart finish. Bright and approachable. Vegan. Drink now or hold."

2024 "The very young and harmonious red 2024 Garnacha is primary and fruit-driven and reveals contained ripeness and a juicy palate with varietal aromas and flavors, red berries and flowers, soft and velvety, with some herbal flavors in the finish and almost imperceptible tannins. As with the white, only a fraction of the volume matured in barrel for a couple of months. It's approachable and fresh. Drink Date: 2025 - 2029."

Garnacha "Revolution" 2022

"The more serious and mature 2022 Garnacha Revolution has notes of cherries in liqueur and a Mediterranean profile. It's rich and juicy, very Garnacha, with ripeness but also freshness and very fine tannins. It spent 12 months in 500-liter French oak barrels. It might not be terribly complex, but it's very pleasant and represents very good value for money. Drink Date: 2025 - 2030."
